

Karen Holtkamp

Biography

Karen Holtkamp, a senior consultant for Promega, is an experienced program developer, trainer and business writer who serves national and international clients. Karen began her career in public relations and marketing. While serving as Vice President—Creative for a Midwest marketing and communications agency, Karen was responsible for developing and producing award-winning, multi-year training, incentive and recognition programs.

Today, Karen delivers a wide range of communications solutions for clients in diverse industries through her work at Promega and her own communications and development business. She is an experienced workshop facilitator in a wide variety of subjects, including management and leadership skills, presentational speaking, time management, personnel development, and team building. Workshop participants value Karen's practical business experience, her energetic and engaging style, and her ability to help learners identify tangible ways to improve their performance.

Karen also serves as an adjunct instructor of business communications and research interviewing in the Communication Arts department at Xavier University, where she completed undergraduate work in communications. She has also completed graduate work in training, education and development.
